INTRODUCTION

EARLY in the publication of the twenty volumes of the Dictionary of American Biography it became evident that an analytical index must be compiled if the wealth of the Dictionary was to be made available for reference.* The task of compiling an index of this scope has been great, and the problems have been complicated, but the compilers have rendered patient and devoted service to the end that all subjects in the entire set might be classified and arranged so as to give the Dictionary its maximum usefulness. The index, in its broadest sense, is an epitome of our national life in all its varied aspects and the compilers have kept constantly in mind this body of factual evidence.

The index has the following main divisions:

1. Subjects: Alphabetical list of the persons about whom articles have been written, with the dates of birth and death, the volume and page of the article, and the name of the respective contributor.

2. Contributors: The names of all contributors arranged alphabetically, followed by the names of the persons who are subjects of the articles.

3. Birthplaces: The name of each state or foreign country in which the subject of an article was born, followed by lists of those persons born within that state or country.

4. Schools and Colleges: The educational institutions attended by the subjects of the biographies, followed in each case by an alphabetical list of the students who attended each institution.

5. Occupations: The persons included in the Dictionary grouped according to occupation, using in each instance the occupation or occupations given at the beginning of the article.

6. Topics: An index of all the topics of importance discussed in the Dictionary. Certain specific topics have been collected in groups, for example, homesteads and plantations, ships, nicknames, etc.

* Owing to various difficulties, however, the editors were unable to undertake this task. Accordingly it was undertaken by the publishers, who have consulted with representatives of the American Council of Learned Societies, but the publishers issue this volume on their own responsibility.

HOW TO USE THE INDEX

1. To find the name of the subject of an article included in the Dictionary, the reader should turn to the first main division (pp. 1–170) and he will there find the name if it is in the Dictionary.

2. To find the name of the contributor of a particular article, the reader should first find the initials at the end of the article and then refer to the list of contributors at the beginning of the particular volume.

3. To find the names of other articles by the same contributor, the reader should consult the second main division of the Index (pp. 171–245).

4. To find the name of a state or foreign country in which one of the subjects was born, the reader should consult the particular article.

5. To find what subjects were born in any state or country, the reader should refer to the third main division of the Index (pp. 246–309).

6. To find the school or college attended by the subjects of the biographies, the reader should refer to the specific articles.

7. To find all the names of subjects who have attended any school or college, the reader should refer to the fourth main division of the Index (pp. 310–359). In a number of instances the person attended one or more institutions. In all cases the name of the subject is given under the name of the institution from which he received a degree. In many instances the name will also be found under the name of the institution with which he was closely associated for a period of time.

8. To find the occupation or occupations of any subject of a biography, the reader should refer to the beginning of the particular biography.

9. To find the representatives of the various occupations, the reader should refer to the fifth main division of the Index (pp. 360–427).
